Update 35 - December 2006

CITB re-launches scheme

In 1979 the CITB introduced the site management safety training scheme. Since that time the course has been further developed to reflect the changing nature of the industry. In January 2007 the latest evolution, CITB Construction Skills Site Safety Plus, will be unveiled.

The scheme introduces the concept of life long progression from operative to manager. As part of this concept the following new courses are available:

1. 1 day Safety Awareness course
2. 2 day Supervisor course

(The existing 5 day Managers course and 2 day Refresher remain in place)

Entry into the scheme is possible at operative, supervisor and manager level based upon experience. This allows for progression from entry into the construction industry right through to site and project management level.

5 day Site Management Safety Training Scheme (SMSTS) and Refresher

The SMSTS courses have been reviewed in line with current legislation. The course material will reflect changes to the Construction regulations when they are implemented. The course is designed to assist those in management positions, those about to embark on a management role, or proprietors of small construction companies to understand the management of a construction project through feasibility, implementing safe systems of work and successfully handing the project over to the client.

As one of the largest CITB training providers in the UK, 4See Risk Management is accredited to run all of the above courses. We would be delighted to meet with you to discuss your training requirements, or provide any further details on the above courses.

1 day Safety Awareness Course

The Safety Awareness course is aimed at new entrants to the industry and provides them with a summary of health, safety, welfare and environmental requirements. The course explains the responsibilities of the employer as well as the responsibilities of employees, in order to enable them to protect themselves, and be able to identify when others are at risk.

2 day Supervisor Course

The 2 day Supervisor course has been long awaited by the industry. It is aimed at those who have or are about to take on a supervisory responsibility. The course provides an introduction to health and safety, welfare and environmental duties, creating a sound knowledge base to assist in the safety management of construction processes and sites including the communication of safe practice.
